The Joy of Making Music Together

National Boys Choir of Australia 50th anniversary

The joy of making music together remains strong, 50 years after the choir was begun by Kevin Casey. Although the 1960s were witness to a great change in musical styles, as a teacher of music, Kevin recognised the lack of choral opportunities then available for children. In 1964, there was only one non-school children's choir in Melbourne. Wanting others to experience singing beyond what a school choir could offer, he started with students from Kostka Hall where he taught, as the foundation choristers of the National Boys Choir. Within four years, auditions had expanded beyond this school.

For years the choir rehearsed in the Casey family home, but later moved from Chadstone to Caulfield then Balwyn. Many other rehearsal venues including schools and small halls were used before the choir made its permanent home in Ringwood in 1993. Rehearsals were held on Friday nights and for the reserve choir – the equivalent to today's training choirs – on Saturday afternoons. An annual music camp held initially at Mirboo North and then Bathurst took place during the summer holidays, giving choristers an opportunity to learn the music repertoire and have fun together.

From the beginning, the choir had a professionally-made uniform with the boys going in to Myers to have their blazers fitted. The early choir colours were green and gold. In the 1970s as alternative stage wear, the boys wore red shirts and white trousers. The current uniform was introduced in 2001. The distinctive red robes have remained a constant feature throughout the choir's history.

The early repertoire consisted of classical songs, popular songs from musicals, folk songs and spirituals. Over the last 25 years, the choir has sung major works with an orchestra and staged operas written especially for boys' voices.

Opportunities for performance have always been sought for the choir. From the very first concert for parents and friends held on the Casey's front lawn, the choir has performed locally, interstate and overseas. Further recognition has resulted from links with organisations such as Opera Australia, the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra and Qantas for their well-known I Still Call Australia Home commercials.

Over the years many people have worked tirelessly in assisting and developing the choir. Two in particular are Harold and Yvonne Bird, whose dedicated efforts over 25 years culminated in the landmark purchase of the choir's initial Ringwood premises. The involvement of the Casey family in key roles over the entire 50 years is also remarkable.

After 50 years, the choir has developed a strong base and is well placed to maintain its enviable reputation for excellence in both choral performance and in the personal development of its choristers. The opportunities available to the boys are priceless as is the joy their singing brings to countless others.

In addition to the above, there have been many parents who have offered tremendous support over the Choir's first fifty years. Public relations, wardrobe, fundraising, camp and function supervision, set and costume development, building development, music library, nursing and medical assistance and hospitality are some of the major areas where parents have given wonderful service. It is not practical to list the hundreds of people who have given freely of their time and effort but we take this opportunity to sincerely thank them for their assistance.

Many congratulations to the National Boys Choir of Australia on reaching their half-century. The Melbourne Symphony Orchestra is so proud of its ongoing collaboration with the National Boys Choir and looks forward to many more outstanding performances in the years to come.
